Transfer my calls to another phone

Last night I received one of those phone calls all dreads getting in the middle of the night: an emergency happened to a family member :(Turns out my uncle - who has been in and out of the hospital for years with heart problems - was finally on his last leg and was expected to pass any time overnight. My mom had called us kids to shoot him one last call and say goodbye, so we quickly did it and it was one of the weirdest/hardest conversations I've probably had to make. What do you say to someone who's about to pass into the next world? I've never had the chance to actually say goodbye before anyone would leave (my grandparents passed in their sleep), so needless to say it was pretty surreal. All I tried to do was make him laugh one last time and let him know how much we love him and that we will see him again one day soon (although he says he will be down under while we are unaccustomed, haha.. he was quite troublemaker back in the day :)) The next day my parents flew out there hoping to catch him one last time before the inevitable, and not only did they get to do it and say their goodbyes in person, but they found out something even more amazing: HE wasn't dying!!!! Apparently they had a new on-call doctor on stage who accidentally read his characters wrongand thus set off with panic and sadness. So while he's still, in fact, deteriorating because of his bad heart unfortunately, they're now saying he'll actually have a whole year or so left until it's time to worry again. Incredible! The reason I'm telling you all this? MAKE SURE YOU LIVE YOUR LIFE! I know we all want to rock it out and be wildly rich beyond our dreams, but at the end of the day money is the last thing we probably care about when it's time to go. Yes it's important to pay attention too, and yes you want things in place in case of an emergency hit (just ask my poor friend Ashley who recently lost her father and had to deal with messy finances on top of everything), but really it's about feeling like you've lived a happy and rewarding life. At least from what I understand... If it changes, and there's blogging in after-life, I'll be sure to confirm back :) All I know is that right now my uncle appreciates life more than anyone else. To know that you are dying within hours, and then get a 1 year extension is incomprehensible to me. What would you do with an extra year of your life??? What can you do NOW while you (hopefully) have many more left than that?? Are you happy? Personally, I'll take time off from obsessive about money that I make, and reflect on some of these issues instead. I really don't want to wake up one day (my last day) and feel like I haven't lived anything! It may be time to update that ol' bucket list while I'm on it too. By Kenyonda Bradley If you are waiting for an important call but you have errands to run, you can choose to forward your home call to your mobile phone. By forwarding your home calls, you can answer the call the same way you would if you were on your phone. However, it requires you to have a forwarding service in your account. If you do not have a forwarding service, please contact your home phone provider and have an add-on. Call *72 or 72# on your home phone and 1172 on a rotating phone. Listen for the dial tone. Enter your mobile number and listen for a series of tones followed by ringing. This indicates that you have forwarded your number. Answer your phone when it rings. This will activate the call waiting for your line. If the line on your mobile phone is busy or you can't answer the call, repeat steps 1 and 2 to set call forwarding without having to answer your mobile phone. Turn off call forwarding by calling *73 or 73# on your home phone and 1173 on a rotating phone. Listen for the series of tones to confirm that your call forwarding is turned off. We can't hide behind e-mail. Why? Real business relationships are formed in two ways, says entrepreneur-turned-investor Mark Suster: in person and over the phone. The guy knows how to keep a phone driver concise and efficient—so let's get in touch with his calls to make better calls. 1) Get preparedYou don't have to be a politician to have talking points in your pocket—or, perhaps more accessibly, written down before making the call. From Suster's description, it's prep as how reporters do phone interviews: sketch out the points you want to cover, the question that you make, and how much time you have. This gives your call an anchor. The best interviews are conversations, but as Miles Davis might say, it takes a lot of preparation to properly improvise.2) Opening with banterLeaping in your hard sales pitch is awkward, Suster notes, so start soft: while you might consider yourself too cool to talk about the weather, asking what the other person is experiencing is an easy way to build empathy and co-investment. But if the report doesn't rise, it's get to business time.3) Be explicitOnce the joke buffer has been built, transition to the thing at hand—and let the other person know what it is (they can't read your thoughts, especially over the phone). Suster says you should say something like listening, the reason I'm calling is...—which is as direct as it is useful and helps each of you customize your interests. And if you don't have a specific question, you can say something simple as I was just hoping to get 10 minutes of your time to tell you what we're up to so that the next chance we get to hit down the line you have more of an understanding. Yes, you are excited about your business, but a phone call is a dialogue, not a monologue. This is bad enough personally but I promise you if you do phone receiver will start exhibiting, Suster Suster If you listen carefully, you'll probably even hear tapping on a keyboard. To prevent that, you can pause your pitch to ask if they are with you and maybe gather some feedback—that will make you smarter on your next call.5) Do not know your question Ask for four things or you get none, Suster quips, and your one question should be obvious, easy to achieve.6) Know the relationshipThen do not ask for a great service so you have a tight relationship so you have a tight relationship says Suster. Your network is not only the number of nodes, we have learned; it's the quality of relationships.7) Know the timelineAssume this won't be the only time in your life that you should talk to them, says Suster, so you don't fit everything into a single conversation. If you cultivate a good long-term relationship through patience, perseverance and reciprocity, there will be many more opportunities, Suster says, echoing the tenets of scam-free networks.8) Keep it shortYour reputation is the sum of the interactions people have with you. Phoners are part of that process, Suster says: When you think of your relationship with the individual as a relationship you will build over time and over many conversations, discussions, chats at conferences or whatever you will realize that you must be known to be respectful of others' time. If you are known as the person who is always long winded you are less likely to get the next few calls on the calendar. Less is better, I promise.
